

THE 321ST INFANTRY

S. awarded in the 81st Division. Lieutenant Schilletter displayed remarkable coolness and marked ability in commanding the men of his sector of the trench. There were nine wounded, but none killed, on the American side. The German casualties were thirteen killed and one wounded, who was taken prisoner. This was the first prisoner taken by the 81st Division.

That morning, as we saw the stretcher bearers carrying our wounded comrades wrapped in bloody blankets to the first aid station, some unconscious, others groaning pitifully, we felt with a tremor of our whole being the horror of war. A new and fierce hate was born in our hearts for all things and people who cause war.

On the night of October 16 those companies still remaining in the trenches were relieved by the French. The 81st Division was brigaded with the 20th French Division on this sector.

SECOND OVERSEAS TRAINING AREA.

After spending two days in St. Dié, we took a two days' hike to a training area near Rambervillers. We arrived here the night of October 20th, thoroughly tired out. We had covered about fifty kilometers in two days with full packs.
